AI EXECUTIVE SUMMARY The petroleum market is currently navigating an escalating tightening regime characterized by elevated geopolitical risks and heightened volatility sensitivity. While no confirmed physical supply disruptions have been reported, the market is under significant structural pressure, with Russia identified as the largest single contributor to this strain. The concentration profile remains broadly dispersed, indicating a lack of a dominant node, yet the elevated exposure at key chokepoints, particularly the Strait of Hormuz, underscores potential vulnerabilities. Recent developments, including tensions surrounding Iran-U.S. negotiations and Russia's strategic maneuvers in energy exports, further complicate the landscape, reinforcing the need for vigilant monitoring of policy and supply dynamics.
FLOW STATUS No confirmed physical supply disruption reported.	CHOKEPOINT RISK Chokepoint exposure elevated.	STRUCTURAL BALANCE Tightening dominant – limited counter-signals.	CONCENTRATION 23% in Russia
