

Global Petroleum — Risk Alert Timeline

Alert Window: Today · Generated: 2026-03-12 12:23:43

Situation Brief

The current threat level in the global oil market is high, primarily driven by Iran's military actions, which account for 94% of the geopolitical risk. Iran's recent strikes on oil tankers in the Strait of Hormuz and attacks on vessels have escalated tensions, leading to immediate supply uncertainty and a structural tightening in the market, with WTI at $86.15 and Brent at $87.77. Near-term implications include potential price increases as Goldman Sachs has raised its oil price forecast in response to these developments. Key indicators to watch next include further military actions from Iran and the response of regional players, particularly regarding maritime security in the Strait of Hormuz.
