AI EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The petroleum market is currently characterized by a tightening structural regime, with a pressure score indicating heightened risk across various categories, including infrastructure, policy, sanctions, and supply. Iran emerges as the largest single contributor to this structural pressure, accounting for a notable share, while the overall concentration profile remains broadly dispersed, suggesting no single dominant player. Confirmed or probable physical supply disruptions have been detected, exacerbating chokepoint exposure and reinforcing a risk premium across crude markets, which are now exhibiting elevated sensitivity to geopolitical developments. The recent resurgence of tensions in the Strait of Hormuz, particularly as India seeks to secure oil supplies, underscores the precarious nature of the current market posture.

FLOW STATUS Confirmed or probable physical supply disruption detected.	CHOKEPOINT RISK Chokepoint exposure elevated.	STRUCTURAL BALANCE Tightening leads – moderate counter-signals.	CONCENTRATION 18% in Iran
